It may perhaps be interesting to examine what is the amount lost by the people of these United States, in the diminished quantity of labor performed, in consequence of the existence of slavery. In the case nothing more than an approximation is attainable. Edwards, the historian of the West Indies, in his account of the management of a sugar plantation, describes the slaves as divided into three gangs; of which the first includes the most healthy and robust of the men and women. After leading this the country is the state of the mountain he adds.
